

We change our behavior when the pain of staying the same becomes greater than the pain of changing. Consequences give us the pain that motivates us to change.

Henry Cloud

When we fail to set boundaries and hold people accountable, we feel used and mistreated. This is why we sometimes attack who they are, which is far more hurtful than addressing a behavior or a choice.

Brene Brown

You teach people how to treat you by what you allow, what you stop, and what you reinforce.

Tony Gaskins

When you feel yourself becoming angry, resentful, or exhausted, pay attention to where you haven't set a healthy boundary.

Crystal Andrus

journeyscomo.com

2011 Corona Road,
Suite 313 & 315

Columbia, MO 65203

Cheryl Arens, PLPC

Compassionate Boundaries

Boundaries are critical to healthy relationships. Without boundaries we may be able to have a relationship short term, but eventually a relationship without boundaries will crash and burn. A misconception that many people have is that boundaries keep people from each other (shut down connection) but actually they PROTECT relationship and connection.

How do we know if we are setting healthy boundaries?

Sharon Martin suggests the following points as SIGNS OF HEALTHY BOUNDARIES.....

- Saying no without guilt.
- Asking for what you want or need.
- Taking care of yourself
- Saying "yes" because you want to, not out of obligation or to please others.
- Behaving according to your own values and beliefs.
- Feeling safe to express difficult emotions and have disagreements.
- Feeling support to pursue your own goals.
- Being treated as an equal.
- Taking responsibility for your own happiness
- Not feeling responsible for someone else's happiness
- Being in tune with your own feelings.
- Knowing who you are and what you believe and what you like.

Take a moment to rate yourself on how well you are setting boundaries in your relationships. How did you do?